

Workforce Professionals Academy 2019

April 11th, 2019

Gateway Technical College, Kenosha, WI

For a second consecutive year, AGS President and CTO Derrick Edwards was a guest educator for the National Council for Workforce Education (NCWE) at their New Workforce Professionals Academy. The annual education program travels to various select Community Colleges around the country highlighting best practices and providing focused educational curricula to the current class. This year, Edwards presented on “The Future of Work: Technology and the Workforce – How to Consider the Impact of AI And Automation in the Context of Curriculum Development”. Derrick Edwards led a thoughtful discussion on the impact of automation on Career and Technical Education (CTE) programs. Edwards also provided a framework to the group for how to think about redesigning CTE programs for the future demands of skilled workers. The NCWE provides resources and expertise to community colleges to enhance their efforts in preparing the current and future workforce in a global economy.
